Target Audience

Graduate students in the Ph.D. program in Economics who have completed their field paper and are engaged in dissertation research in the area of microeconomic theory.

Prerequisites

Permission of the instructor and the Director of Graduate Studies in the Economics department.

Course Goals and Learning Objectives

The purpose of this course (ECON 970) or workshop is (at least) three-fold:

1. By actively engaging in the workshop both as a presenter and a prepared and vocal participant, a student improves his or her ability to organize thoughts and to discuss ones' own and other research.

2. Participation in the workshop allows the student to associate, correct, or avoid similar problems in one's own research, and to learn appropriate presentation and research skills by observing and engaging others.

3. Participation in the workshop provides the student with feedback on his or her own research in a relaxed, but formal, setting from student colleagues and multiple faculty members who may or may not be dissertation committee members.

Final Exams

There is no final exam in this course. Graduate courses are not required to have final exams.

Course Policies

Regular attendance is expected and will be accounted for in the assignment of grades. Written comments are accepted and expected, even if late.
