

Alumni Spotlight: A conversation with John Altschuler - March 18, 2024 5:30-7:00PM

Murphey 116 [FLYER]

The Departments of Communication and Economics are pleased to co-sponsor an event featuring UNC alumnus John Altschuler, creator of King of the Hill, Silicon Valley, Lopez and more, who will participate in a public interview on Monday, March 18 from 5:30-7:00PM in Murphey 116.

He will also visit Gardner on 3/18 from 3:00 – 4:30 pm for open office hours (in room 110) to meet with students and to share with them how his training in economics has impacted him throughout his career.

John was an ECON Major and remains a longtime supporter of COMM's Hollywood Internship Program. He will offer students lots of insights into the future of the entertainment industries. John's career path and creative work would be especially of interest to students interested in comedy, animation, and careers in the entertainment industries, but his brand of social satire, which comments sharply on Americana and some of the tensions and hypocrisies that undergird American ideals would also be of interest to students in a wide range of disciplines.

Application now open for Spring and Autumn 2024 admission

Program Synopsis

The Master of Actuarial and Quantitative Risk Management (MAQRM) program provides a unique combination of actuarial science, quantitative risk management and data science. These areas have become increasingly intertwined, creating a demand for graduates who have acquired expertise in these fields. The curriculum includes innovative courses in risk management, stochastic calculus and data analytics along with more traditional skill training in actuarial science, financial economics, statistics and numerical analysis.
